

How important are your values when you're being squeezed?

This was a presentation by Bethany Logan, Associate Director of the University of Sussex, given at a Jisc-hosted workshop on evaluating collective funding models for OA books. In it, she outlined the approach that had been taken by the library at Sussex when budget squeezes made supporting OA schemes more difficult and something that required more buy-in from other senior stakeholders at the university.

At Copim Compass, we would be very happy to link to other comparable presentations about how budget can be carved out to support OA infrastructures despite difficulties, if you are able to provide links to these, please share them via info@copim.ac.uk
